It seems outrageous to me that they'd charge you for something they were unable to deliver. Imagine buying something from a store and being told that it was out of stock but you'll have to pay for it anyway! Come on!

If I were you, I'd take them to small claims court if you can't solve it any other way. Chances are they won't show up, and you'll win by default. If you

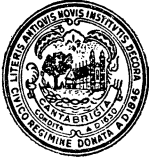

Q. Our family of four would like to visit London this summer. We saw a package on British Airways (they call it the "Taste of London" package) for $849 per person, including airfare from the East Coast, three nights at the Tavistock Hotel, airport transfers and a bus tour of London.

How can we tell if this is a good deal? Are we better off ing a "group" fare on British Airways (www.britishairways.com). They have a deal this summer where four people can fly from the East Coast to London for $1,949 RT, or $487 per person, with the only catch that passengers must buy $100 worth of car rental.
