OVERLAY ORDINANCE

LEGAL NOTICE
CITY OF CAMBRIDGE
FIRST PUBLICATION #2881
IN THE YEAR TWO THOUSAND
AN ORDINANCE

In Amendment to the "Zoning Ordinance of the City of Cambridge"

Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Cambridge as follows:

Amend the text of the Zoning Ordinance of the City of Cambridge by making the following changes to Section 11.50 - Harvard Square Overlay District

A. Delete the existing line that reads "Section 11.50 - Harvard Square Overlay District" and substitute therefore the line "Section 11.50 - Harvard Square Overlay District and Harvard Square Historic Overlay District".

B. Delete Section 11.51 and substitute therefor the following:

11.51 Establishment and Scope. There is hereby established the Harvard Square Overlay District and the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District which shall be governed by the regulations and procedures specified in this Section 11.50. It is the intent of this section that these regulations shall apply to an area described generally as the Harvard Square business district and certain abutting portions of the neighborhoods around it.

C. Create a new Section 11.51.1 to read as follows:

11.51.1 The Harvard Square Overlay District shall be that overlay district established on the Zoning Map of the City of Cambridge by Section 3.20. All provisions of the Harvard Square Overlay District and all references to it in this Ordinance shall apply equally to the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District except as set forth below.

D. Delete Section 11.52 in its entirety and substitute therefor the following:

11.52 General Purpose. It is the purpose of this Section 11.50 to augment existing zoning regulations to respond to the unique problems and pressures for change particular to the Harvard Square Area. The regulations contained in said section provide for more careful public scrutiny of development proposals that may alter the established urban form of the Harvard Square Area. These regulations are intended to channel the extreme development pressures in ways which will preserve and enhance the unique functional environment and visual character of the Harvard Square area; to mitigate the functional impacts of new development on adjacent residential neighborhoods; to maintain the present diversity of development and open space patterns and building scales and ages; to protect and enhance the historic resources of the Harvard Square area; and to provide sufficient regulatory flexibility to advance the general purposes of this Section 11.52. The additional flexibility granted to development within the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District is intended to facilitate the protection and enhancement of the historic resources and character of Harvard Square while not unreasonably limiting the opportunities for appropriate contemporary changes to the built environment in the Harvard Square area.

E. In Section 11.53.2, delete the phrase "Harvard Square Development Guidelines, Community Development Department, July 1, 1986" and substitute therefor the phrase "Harvard Square Development Guidelines, 1999".

11.57 Sign Regulations in the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District. All provisions of Article 7.000 shall apply in the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District, except as modified below. It is the intent of these modifications to allow greater flexibility in the size, location and illumination of signs in order to encourage more thoughtful design of individual signs, to encourage greater respect for the building and visual context within which new signs are erected, and thereby add interest and character to the shopping environment in the Harvard Square Overlay District.

1. In Section 7.16.22 - Signs in all Business, Office and Industrial Districts, Paragraphs A, B, and C shall not apply in office and business base districts. However, no signs on the outside of a building may extend higher than 20 feet above grade.

'First Step' hits the streets to help the homeless

cruise around Cambridge and Somerville in the agency's two vans picking up homeless alcoholics and drug users and bring them back to the CASPAR shelter on Albany Street, where they are served meals and offered beds.

The First Step program started in October 1998, after receiving three-year renewable funding from the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development. The premise is that that saving lives today will interrupt the cycle of homelessness tomorrow.

First Step coordinator Michelle O'Brien says that she know that the program saves lives. According to her, many of these homeless individuals refused to check into shelters or seek help until the arrival of First Step.

"After building up a trusting relationship, these people are now going into shelters," she said.

Three teams of two outreach workers work overlapping shifts in order to offer mobile services to homeless individuals 12 hours a day, 8 a.m.-8 p.m., Monday through Friday. The teams follow routes throughout the two cities concentrating on the major squares, meal programs, known hangouts and private hideouts.

Often First Step employees pick up the same people each day, sometimes more than once in a 12-hour period. However, the condition in which these familiar faces are in varies each day.

Last Wednesday, when the First Step team picked up Kenny in the morning, he was much more coherent. He even wanted to drive the van.

"I'm a good driver," he said.

It took a little while for Kenny to get in the van, because even when he's sober, Kenny can't walk too well. He needs crutches to get around — something that Kenny isn't too happy about.

"Have you ever had to walk with these sticks?" he asked. "You don't want to, especially in the ice and rain."

But the rain doesn't bother Kenny, who says that he's waterproof, and neither does pneumonia, he said. Just last week, Kenny was in the hospital.

"I was so sick, they kept me in some room and told me not to go in public," he said. "You guys better cover your face or something because I'm contagious."

To Kenny, taking him back to the shelter doesn't make much sense, because he's just going to go back out.

Nevertheless, Kenny is happy to have a ride. He just wishes he could get a drink first.

"Let's get a half-pint," he said. "I can kill it before we get to the shelter."

It was only a 10-minute drive, but he was probably telling the truth. About halfway there, the team spotted Felix and his friend.

"Do you need a ride?" First Step employee Christine Hicky yelled out the window.

The two of them had just bought a six-pack, so she knew their answer.

"No thanks, lady," Felix said with a smile.

Catching a ride back to the shelter would mean having to leave the beer behind.

The CASPAR shelter, 240 Albany St., is unique in the fact that guests are not required to be sober upon arrival. It is the only "wet" shelter in Cambridge or Somerville, focusing on substance abusing men and women, providing them with a safe refuge from the streets.

Although guests are allowed to be drunk and high when they arrive, they are not allowed to bring any substances or foreign food items into the shelter. Guests are patted down by CASPAR employees before they're allowed to enter.

Usually Kathy Decker, Councilor Marjorie Decker's mother, works the door.

"She runs a tight ship," said Hicky.

Kenny couldn't even bring in his sandwich that a friend had bought him earlier.

After dropping him off, it was back to the streets for the First Step workers, but first Hicky and O'Brien wanted to say hello to Donald, who was drinking around the corner. Donald could hardly walk at all due to is advanced alcoholism, so he's allowed to drink outside the building next to the parking lot.

He's accompanied by his two friends, Richard and Kevin. Richard, a tall, slim man, who wears glasses, looks like he belongs next door teaching aerospace engineering at MIT.

Donald offered O'Brien and Hicky a sip of his vodka, but they declined.

Hicky, 50, has been working for the program for only about six months. She said that she thinks that God delivered this job to her.

"It's my calling," she said. "I just love these people."

The next pick-up was one of her favorites.

"Eddie is just the cutest thing," she said.

Operating as quickly as an MBTA bus, Hicky pulls the van over to the bus stop in Central Square. She and O'Brien get out, say hello to Eddie, and help in the back of the van. Onlookers watched curiously, and if it wasn't for the pleasantness among all parties, they may have thought this was a professional kidnapping.

"How are ya?" Eddie asked, once inside the van.

Now that he had gotten O'Brien's attention, he had something important to tell her.

"Hey — I'm in love with ya," he said.

It was only 10 a.m., but already Eddie, 66, was ready to go back to the shelter and take a nap. CASPAR guests rotate each day for who gets the beds and who gets the floor mats. Out of respect, the elderly usually get to keep the same bed.

It wasn't more than five minutes before the First Step van was needed once again. Bob, a mentally ill patient with a guitar, wanted a ride to the health center to get work done on his leg.

After dropping off Bob, it was back to patrolling the streets, concentrating on the city squares that are subway and bus accessible.

Hicky spotted Stevie and John in Harvard Square. They were "shopping."

"I'm sorry that you're back, but I love to see you," Hicky said to Stevie, who just checked out of a halfway house and was back on the bottle.

"Shit happens," he said.

Stevie and John were back at the shelter in time for lunch, and today's menu was tuna sandwiches, vegetable soup, ice cream, and a choice of coffee, tea or V8 Splash to drink. Muffins and fruits are always available.

One of the kitchen employees complained about not having enough room to store all the food.

"We have tons of food," Hicky said. "What we need are jeans, socks and underwear."

Hicky's lunch was cut short though. The Cambridge police just called, and the First Step team needed to drive over to Central Square right away and pick up Angel.

Inside Dunkin' Donuts, Angel, 33, was slumped over a table ready to pass out. Two police officers were standing beside him talking.

When the team arrives, Angel snaps a bit back to life. He was happy to see O'Brien. "Michelle. Michelle. Michelle," he said as he stumbled into her arms for a hug.

Angel was ready to go home. "Thank you, officers," he said in parting.

The police and First Step employees work hand in hand with each other, making both of their jobs a little easier.

"It's a great service," said Frank Pasquarello, public information officer for the Cambridge police. "It frees up police officers and helps us quite a bit."

According to O'Brien and Hicky, the police are tremendous advocates to the program.

"The Cambridge and Somerville police are just wonderful," O'Brien said on the way to check out who's hanging around Porter Square.

The normal crew was there drinking on a bench. They waved at O'Brien and Hicky to say hello, but they weren't looking for a ride.

Nevertheless, the two decided to pay them a visit just to see how everything was going.

George and George had just gotten out of the Somerville jail and were complaining about the conditions and mistreatment they were subjected to there.

"That place is awful," George said. "The Cambridge jail is a hotel in comparison."

George, like many homeless alcoholics, gets arrested routinely for crimes like drinking in public and disorderly conduct. He was frustrated that he always seems to get arrested on Fridays and ends up having to stay the entire weekend.

"Always carry your toothbrush," Hicky said.

Quickly, Rich pulled out his toothbrush and his razor and displayed them proudly.

He and his three friends maintain their appearance very well. George looks like he belongs in GQ Magazine, Hicky said.

In fact, earlier that day, George, who was wearing a Harvard sweatshirt, got $10 from some guy who thought that it was ridiculous that his parents would pay all that tuition and not send him enough spending money.

The four friends laughed at the story while they enjoyed their drinks.

"Serve me up, bartender," George said to Brian as he passed out the vodka portion of the strawberry milk cocktails.

They were in a good mood today and had no desire to catch a ride back to the shelter. However, according to O'Brien and Hicky, their alcoholism doesn't always leave them in such high spirits.

"Sometimes they're very sad," O'Brien said.

Many of these homeless alcoholics need to rely on one another a great deal for morale. They share and try to help out one another whenever they can.

"They're very community-based," Hicky said. She always wondered why they didn't just move down South.

"But this is their home," she said, even if they're homeless.

Some of these men and women have been in Cambridge for decades. One of First Step's daily pick-ups, Ronnie, has been in Cambridge his entire life, selling newspapers in Central Square for 35 years.

He is so well known throughout the community that people call him "the mayor of Cambridge."

On the way back to the First Step headquarters, located at the Phoenix Center in Somerville, O'Brien and Hicky stopped to visit with Ronnie in Inman Square.

They were disappointed that he wasn't his "normal jolly self." He was happy, though, when Hicky gave him some candy, which he loves.

Ronnie was concerned about helping out his sick friend, who was in desperate need of a pint.

"He's such a sweetheart," Hicky said. "But he isn't looking too good."

Ronnie was shaking a little bit, and O'Brien and Hicky thought that he may not have had enough to drink. In the advanced stages of alcoholism, the body physically demands it, just like any other chemical addiction.

On Sundays, when state law prohibits the sale of alcohol during most months, many of these homeless alcoholics drink mouthwash, extracts and other "non-drinkable" drinks. Sometimes bootleggers will sell them watered-down liquor at high profits.

While drinking mouthwash and rubbing alcohol seems harsh, many of these people are so far into the advanced stages of alcoholism that they couldn't become sober even if they wanted to.

According to a study conducted by the Harvard School of Public Health in affiliation with the Cambridge City Hospital, many advanced alcoholics may not have the capacity of self-awareness needed to seek treatment. This translates to them lacking the ability to even take step one of the 12-step process on the road to recovery.

Many alcoholics do seek treatment and are successful in recovery, and CASPAR has numerous programs to facilitate this. However, First Step specifically focuses on reducing the risks that homeless alcoholics face while living on the streets, believing that if these people are treated with respect and offered safe refuge, then they are more likely to seek treatment and rebuild their lives.

To do this, O'Brien said that she must first establish a mutual respect with these homeless individuals and build a trusting relationship. After six years of working with these people, she is no longer just a First Step employee, she is their friend.

Just about every one of the people that First Step picked up Wednesday told O'Brien that he loved her.

Angel not only told her that he loved her, but actually yelled out that he loved himself. I'm a lucky girl," O'Brien said.

Students and parents find their way

according to Evans. Students in next year's 10th, 11th and 12th grades have not yet been assigned.

The changes, however, will also curtail CRLS students' freedom of choice. At least as ninth- and 10th-graders, they will not have the freedom to take classes all over the building in order to put together an optimum schedule, as more enterprising students had previously done.

"I am resigned to one elective [for Susanna]," said Gilsdorf at the eighth-grade orientation night at CRLS.

Her son played in band as an extra-curricular activity and her daughter will have the opportunity to do the same. Already an accomplished flutist, Hildebidle plays in the All-City Band.

In preliminary course selection Thursday night, eighth-graders were asked to sign up for English, social studies, interdisciplinary science or biology classes. They also had to pick one of five math courses, a foreign language, one of two health classes, an advising period and a learning support period. For their one elective, the students could pick one class from a list of three visual arts classes, two dramatic arts classes, five music classes, an integrated technology class or a computer science class.

Some parents complained that they knew little or nothing about the classes and asked why a course catalogue had not been sent out ahead of time.

Evans said the catalogue details an overwhelming number of classes, many of which are closed to freshmen. Instead, she said, it seemed to make more sense to make descriptions of freshman classes available to the eighth-graders — though those were not sent out ahead of time either.

Christina Smith, pausing for a moment in the crush of kids and adults at the two orientation sessions to review her son's course selections, said she expected more detail.

A CRLS alumna herself, she remembered a more tranquil transition into ninth grade.

"If it's not coordinated now, it's going to be even harder when the kids get up here," Smith said.

She described the orientation as a learning experience for both herself and her son, her first child to enter high school. Though patient for now, she said she wants information directly from the high school before school starts, so she doesn't have to rely on hearsay as she and her son prepare for ninth grade.

"I want to emphasize that this is a work in progress," said Evans last Thursday, addressing an auditorium packed with eighth-graders and their parents.

Evans has not yet hired deans for each of the new schools. She expected to start interviewing candidates for the dean positions today.

In the meantime, teams of teachers are laying out the blueprint for the redesigned school, both in the literal, physical moves teachers will make within the building, and in a figurative sense. Each team meets once a week for two to three hours, Evans said. According to the new contract, the teachers are being paid $20 an hour for their efforts.

"There is a mood of excitement and optimism in the air," Evans said.

cruise around Cambridge and Somerville in the agency's two vans picking up homeless alcoholics and drug users and bring them back to the CASPAR shelter on Albany Street, where they are served meals and offered beds.

The First Step program started in October 1998, after receiving three-year renewable funding from the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development. The premise is that that saving lives today will interrupt the cycle of homelessness tomorrow.

First Step coordinator Michelle O'Brien says that she know that the program saves lives. According to her, many of these homeless individuals refused to check into shelters or seek help until the arrival of First Step.

"After building up a trusting relationship, these people are now going into shelters," she said.

Three teams of two outreach workers work overlapping shifts in order to offer mobile services to homeless individuals 12 hours a day, 8 a.m.-8 p.m., Monday through Friday. The teams follow routes throughout the two cities concentrating on the major squares, meal programs, known hangouts and private hideouts.

Often First Step employees pick up the same people each day, sometimes more than once in a 12-hour period. However, the condition in which these familiar faces are in varies each day.

Last Wednesday, when the First Step team picked up Kenny in the morning, he was much more coherent. He even wanted to drive the van.

"I'm a good driver," he said.

It took a little while for Kenny to get in the van, because even when he's sober, Kenny can't walk too well. He needs crutches to get around — something that Kenny isn't too happy about.

"Have you ever had to walk with these sticks?" he asked. "You don't want to, especially in the ice and rain."

But the rain doesn't bother Kenny, who says that he's waterproof, and neither does pneumonia, he said. Just last week, Kenny was in the hospital.

"I was so sick, they kept me in some room and told me not to go in public," he said. "You guys better cover your face or something because I'm contagious."

To Kenny, taking him back to the shelter doesn't make much sense, because he's just going to go back out.

Nevertheless, Kenny is happy to have a ride. He just wishes he could get a drink first.

"Let's get a half-pint," he said. "I can kill it before we get to the shelter."

It was only a 10-minute drive, but he was probably telling the truth. About halfway there, the team spotted Felix and his friend.

"Do you need a ride?" First Step employee Christine Hicky yelled out the window.

The two of them had just bought a six-pack, so she knew their answer.

"No thanks, lady," Felix said with a smile.

Catching a ride back to the shelter would mean having to leave the beer behind.

The changes, however, will also curtail CRLS students' freedom of choice. At least as ninth- and 10th-graders, they will not have the freedom to take classes all over the building in order to put together an optimum schedule, as more enterprising students had previously done.

"I am resigned to one elective [for Susanna]," said Gilsdorf at the eighth-grade orientation night at CRLS.

Her son played in band as an extra-curricular activity and her daughter will have the opportunity to do the same. Already an accomplished flutist, Hildebidle plays in the All-City Band.

In preliminary course selection Thursday night, eighth-graders were asked to sign up for English, social studies, interdisciplinary science or biology classes. They also had to pick one of five math courses, a foreign language, one of two health classes, an advising period and a learning support period. For their one elective, the students could pick one class from a list of three visual arts classes, two dramatic arts classes, five music classes, an integrated technology class or a computer science class.

Some parents complained that they knew little or nothing about the classes and asked why a course catalogue had not been sent out ahead of time.

Evans said the catalogue details an overwhelming number of classes, many of which are closed to freshmen. Instead, she said, it seemed to make more sense to make descriptions of freshman classes available to the eighth-graders — though those were not sent out ahead of time either.

Christina Smith, pausing for a moment in the crush of kids and adults at the two orientation sessions to review her son's course selections, said she expected more detail.

A CRLS alumna herself, she remembered a more tranquil transition into ninth grade.

"If it's not coordinated now, it's going to be even harder when the kids get up here," Smith said.

She described the orientation as a learning experience for both herself and her son, her first child to enter high school. Though patient for now, she said she wants information directly from the high school before school starts, so she doesn't have to rely on hearsay as she and her son prepare for ninth grade.

"I want to emphasize that this is a work in progress," said Evans last Thursday, addressing an auditorium packed with eighth-graders and their parents.

Evans has not yet hired deans for each of the new schools. She expected to start interviewing candidates for the dean positions today.

In the meantime, teams of teachers are laying out the blueprint for the redesigned school, both in the literal, physical moves teachers will make within the building, and in a figurative sense. Each team meets once a week for two to three hours, Evans said. According to the new contract, the teachers are being paid $20 an hour for their efforts.

"There is a mood of excitement and optimism in the air," Evans said.

OVERLAY ORDINANCE

LEGAL NOTICE
CITY OF CAMBRIDGE
FIRST PUBLICATION #2881
IN THE YEAR TWO THOUSAND
AN ORDINANCE

In Amendment to the "Zoning Ordinance of the City of Cambridge"

Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Cambridge as follows:

Amend the text of the Zoning Ordinance of the City of Cambridge by making the following changes to Section 11.50 - Harvard Square Overlay District

A. Delete the existing line that reads "Section 11.50 - Harvard Square Overlay District" and substitute therefore the line "Section 11.50 - Harvard Square Overlay District and Harvard Square Historic Overlay District".

B. Delete Section 11.51 and substitute therefor the following:

11.51 Establishment and Scope. There is hereby established the Harvard Square Overlay District and the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District which shall be governed by the regulations and procedures specified in this Section 11.50. It is the intent of this section that these regulations shall apply to an area described generally as the Harvard Square business district and certain abutting portions of the neighborhoods around it.

C. Create a new Section 11.51.1 to read as follows:

11.51.1 The Harvard Square Overlay District shall be that overlay district established on the Zoning Map of the City of Cambridge by Section 3.20. All provisions of the Harvard Square Overlay District and all references to it in this Ordinance shall apply equally to the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District except as set forth below.

D. Delete Section 11.52 in its entirety and substitute therefor the following:

11.52 General Purpose. It is the purpose of this Section 11.50 to augment existing zoning regulations to respond to the unique problems and pressures for change particular to the Harvard Square Area. The regulations contained in said section provide for more careful public scrutiny of development proposals that may alter the established urban form of the Harvard Square Area. These regulations are intended to channel the extreme development pressures in ways which will preserve and enhance the unique functional environment and visual character of the Harvard Square area; to mitigate the functional impacts of new development on adjacent residential neighborhoods; to maintain the present diversity of development and open space patterns and building scales and ages; to protect and enhance the historic resources of the Harvard Square area; and to provide sufficient regulatory flexibility to advance the general purposes of this Section 11.52. The additional flexibility granted to development within the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District is intended to facilitate the protection and enhancement of the historic resources and character of Harvard Square while not unreasonably limiting the opportunities for appropriate contemporary changes to the built environment in the Harvard Square area.

E. In Section 11.53.2, delete the phrase "Harvard Square Development Guidelines, Community Development Department, July 1, 1986" and substitute therefor the phrase "Harvard Square Development Guidelines, 1999".

11.57 Sign Regulations in the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District. All provisions of Article 7.000 shall apply in the Harvard Square Historic Overlay District, except as modified below. It is the intent of these modifications to allow greater flexibility in the size, location and illumination of signs in order to encourage more thoughtful design of individual signs, to encourage greater respect for the building and visual context within which new signs are erected, and thereby add interest and character to the shopping environment in the Harvard Square Overlay District.

1. In Section 7.16.22 - Signs in all Business, Office and Industrial Districts, Paragraphs A, B, and C shall not apply in office and business base districts. However, no signs on the outside of a building may extend higher than 20 feet above grade.
