JOHN GREENWOOD'S 1749 painting of Boston dancing master Ephraim Turner is now safely back home at the New England Historic Genealogical Society, thanks to Cambridge Historical Society Director Bettina A. Norton.

'Super sleuth' Norton helps recover 18th Century painting

By David Wiegand
Staff writer

"The Historical Society is always on the look-out for Cambridge-related antiquities, but this is not the way we generally go about it."

Bettina Norton, director of the Cambridge Historical Society, could afford to joke about the incident, while the folks at the New England Historic Genealogical Society (NEHGS) heaved a collective sigh of relief this week.

The "incident," widely reported in Boston's daily newspapers last week, involved the unexpected recovery of a valuable 18th Century portrait which had been stolen from the NEHGS reading room two years before. Headline-writers at the "Globe" and "Herald" had a bit of fun saying that John Greenwood's 1749 portrait of Boston dancing master Ephraim Turner had been found in a Lynn "flea market," in fact, Norton herself was the unnamed art sleuth who spotted the painting at a sale by the Lynn Historical Society.

"It's a real O Henry story," Norton said this week, "complete with a moral of sorts."

The story began with a scheduling conflict after Norton and her husband tried to schedule a weekend of mountain climbing in New Hampshire with their friends, T. Corwin and Cynthia Fleming. Unable to obtain reservations until Saturday night, Aug. 11, the Nortons decided to follow through with an original plan to visit the Lynn sale that day and to join the Flemings in New Hampshire later that night.

As soon as Bettina Norton spotted the painting, she was sure it was an original, although its temporary owner, who told police that her son had bought the painting for $25 "out of the trunk of a car," thought the painting was only a print.

"I would have bought it if it had actually had a price on it," Norton said this week. "But (the woman displaying the painting) hadn't put a price on it, I think because she suspected it might be valuable."

The painting was mistaken as a print, Norton said, because it had been "lined," a method of preserving old paintings which gives the surface "a certain flatness."

Norton's suspicions about the Greenwood painting were shared by her assistant, M. David Samson, who happens to be a friend of the curator of the Lynn Historical Society.

On Saturday night, upon her arrival in New Hampshire, Norton told Cynthia Fleming about her "find" and, Fleming, too, was convinced that the painting was the missing Greenwood.

"Our husbands call us 'Nancy Drew and George,'" Norton laughed, referring, of course, to the famous girl detective of fiction and her sidekick — not only because of the Greenwood painting, but also because the two had previously retrieved the only known examples of 18th Century paintings in New England churches, two cherub heads from the original Trinity Church in Boston.

Greenwood lived from 1727 to 1792 and spent only a few years in Boston before heading to Surinam where he painted some "interesting genre scenes," Norton said. Chiefly, however, Greenwood is known for his portrait work.

Ephraim Turner was the son of Thomas and Hannah Jenkins Turner of Scituate and settled in Boston where he opened a "School of Politeness."

"Since he was a dancing master, I suspect he was an Episcopalian, since none of the other religions at the time allowed dancing," said Norton, an Episcopalian herself and the archivist of Trinity Church.

The Greenwood painting, now safely back in the Newbury street reading room of the New England Historic Genealogical Society, has been valued at $50,000.

Parental stress line helping fathers

Fathers experiencing problems with their children are making increased use of the Parental Stress Line, a 24-hour telephone counseling service for Massachusetts parents. According to Sarah Belcher, Stress Line Director, in the past year one out of every four calls to the Line has been from a father, compared to one out of every ten during the Line's previous four years of operation.

Belcher speculates that the increase in calls from men may represent a trend that fathers are participating more in child care.

The Parental Stress Line has received over 50,000 calls in its five years of operation. The toll-free number 1-800-632-8188 is available to parents in Massachusetts 24 hours a day.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT
ROBERT W. HEALY
City Manager

August 15, 1984

To the Honorable, the City Council:

On Friday, July 20, 1984, we opened bids for construction of Phase II of Lechmere Canal Park. The low bid came in at $4,333,111, which is $1,258,000 over budget.

The primary reason for the higher costs since the original bond authorization in March 1983 is the delays and resultant inflation in putting the project out for construction. These delays resulted from the need to have private investment around the perimeter of the park ready to go into construction.

Since the private developers are to maintain the park, and since the park is surrounded by development parcels, it was necessary to coordinate the beginning of park construction with the first private construction. Lack of private financial commitments prevented the private development from proceeding. However, as a result of the Lechmere Canal Development UDAG funded this Spring, two private office buildings are now ready to go forward. These delays over two construction seasons resulted in inflation substantially increasing park costs, despite our efforts to continually scale back the scope of work.

To make up this deficit, I recommend a combination of $233,000 in additional park budget cutbacks plus an increase in our bond authorization of $1,025,000.

Attached is a draft City Council Order authorizing and appropriating the funds.

Very truly yours,

Robert W. Healy
City Manager
