The size of firms that returned surveys is also an important characteristic of the survey sample, since job types may be systematically different in small and large firms⁴. In the sample of surveys returned, large firms represent 17.6 percent, which is slightly greater than the 12.2 percent of large firms found in Cambridge. Thus, larger firms are slightly over-represented compared to small firms.

The survey data were analyzed to look at employment trends in Cambridge from two perspectives: across all respondents and respondents by industry cluster.

⁴ Small firms were defined by less than 50 employees while larger firms have more than this number.
