This morning on the way to school, my son and I were nearly run over by a car speeding down Western Avenue while we were crossing at the pedestrian crossing at Kinnaird Street.

As I'm sure you know, speeding on Western Avenue is routine, despite the posted 25 mph speed limit.

For the past five months, my neighbors and I have been calling the Traffic Department and asking them to repaint a set of stripes at the crossing. We were told that it would be done over the summer. It is October.

The pedestrian crossing at Kinnaird and Western is used by many children who attend either Graham and Parks School or the King School -- located on either end of Kinnaird Street. There is a school bus stop at the corner. Is it going to take a child getting hit by a car to get those stripes painted? Could you place a pedestrian crossing barrel at the intersection in the meantime. Surely we can afford it.

Awaiting your prompt attention,

Helen Epstein
