'Roxy Carmichael' something of a 'Dinky' comedy

Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael (Jim Abrahams). With Winona Ryder, Jeff Daniels, Laila Robins, Dinah Manoff, Frances Fisher and Thomas Wilson Brown.

By PAUL SHERMAN

"Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael" is the type of movie that feels as if it started out as one kind of movie and ended up as another. It's the story of an outcast teenage girl which could have been a modest drama with some low-key comedy thrown in, but instead it was made as a broad comedy with some drama thrown in. The results are not pretty.

Dinky Bossetti (Winona Ryder) is the eccentric high-schooler who's disliked by her classmates, misunderstood by her parents, and fed up with her hometown of Clyde, Ohio. The talk of the town in Clyde as the movie opens is Roxy Carmichael, who once was the town eccentric herself, but who left and went on to become a celebrity, and who is now returning to open the Roxy Carmichael Center for Cosmetology and Drama.

Dinky, who's never even heard of Roxy Carmichael as the movie starts, soon becomes obsessed with the local legend. She visits Roxy's birthplace (now a shrine of sorts) and locks herself in her old bedroom, starting gazing herself on the candy Roxy used to like and grills Roxy's first love (Jeff Daniels) all about her.

And when Dinky finds out that Roxy had a child she gave up just before she left town to chase her dreams, Dinky (an adopted child) starts filling herself with the idea that she really is Roxy's kid and that Roxy is going to whisk her away to Hollywood after she opens the local center.

This all comes off as superficial because most everything in "Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael" is very overestimated. First off, Dinky is a poor imitation of Ryder's "Beetlejuice" character, but without a lot of the spunk. The parents are offered as totally garish and self-involved merchants and most of the townspeople are similarly exaggerated.

The action even has this same exaggerated quality, making most of the movie seem like bad TV. Daniels' character has a few tiffs with his wife that come off like clumsy improvisations, and there are all too many times when director Jim Abrahams goes for cheap gags, especially when Dinky's brood of stray animals are around.

The overstatement probably has a shrill high when Dinky first hears some of a hit song that was written about Roxy. Abrahams lets the song run for about three minutes, which not only kills the emotion you're supposed to feel for Dinky and her obsession, but it just makes you want to shout "OK, we get the point!" at the screen.

The only relationship that's convincing is between Dinky and her new guidance counselor (Laila Robins). There's a whole little subplot about relationships between women in Karen Leigh Hopkins' script that seems to have been squelched by Abrahams and the powers that be behind the movie. This primarily involves the fact that Roxy had a female lover, too. A scene in which Roxy's female lover (Dinah Manoff) finds her new lover not as stimulating as Roxy — which mirrors a scene with Daniels' character and his wife — was reportedly cut way down after test screenings, and renders this part of the story insignificant.

Director Abrahams is part of the Zucker/Abrahams/Zucker team of "Airplane!" and "The Naked Gun" fame. Ironically, "Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael" suffers from forced comedy, just as Jerry Zucker's "Ghost" does. If these guys want to make credible dramas, they're going to have to learn to leave most of the comedy behind. "Roxy" is dinky, indeed.

Many people from around the world know the Cambridge Discovery Information Booth at Harvard Square. It's a landmark, a brightly-colored reminder that, in one of the best-known and busiest squares in the world, calm and rational answers to sometimes serious, sometimes hilarious questions are available.

A major fifth birthday party for the Harvard Square Information Booth and volunteers will be held Wednesday, Nov. 27, at 5 pm at Cambridge City Hall.

Mayor Alice Wolf, other city officials and the Cambridge Discovery board of directors will be on hand to acknowledge the efforts of volunteers who have, during the past five years:

- Given out over 300,000 bus schedules.
- Answered over a quarter-million questions.
- Handed out more than 50,000 tour and other informational brochures.

The Cambridge Discovery volunteers help visitors to the Information Booth plan their stays in Cambridge, from seeing the sights and learning about the history of the city, to finding food, shopping and even places to stay. Volunteers also answer transportation questions and locate service organizations for Cambridge residents as well as help them with restaurants and shopping.

Charlotte Moore, Cambridge Discovery executive director, said the volunteers' enthusiasm extends far beyond the hours they are in the booth.

Marsalis offers lessons on life and jazz at Rindge & Latin

Marsalis was transfixed by Johnson's voice. He stayed for another hour and a half to work with her and the band. "He hasn't eaten yet this morning. He has an interview and a sound check. He blew all of that off to sit down with this young lady," said Marsalis' production manager, David Robinson. "She has something that just can't be taught."

"I was on a natural high for the rest of the day," Johnson said later. Marsalis told her to learn to read music, to learn to play the piano, to study jazz and to keep singing. He told her that he would send her tapes and music, and that he wanted her to keep in touch.

Robinson told her that if she ever needed music that she couldn't find, to just call.

"They said, 'We're your brothers,'" said Johnson.

Johnson plans to go to college next year to study music and political science. She wants to perform, but she also wants to become a business entertainment lawyer. As for her music studies, she says she has a bit of coaching from Gordon Beersman, the Cambridge Rindge and Latin jazz band's pianist. (Photo by Ken Williams).

maybe Marsalis will write her a recommendation.
