WHEREAS: The City of Cambridge, has always lead the way in providing services and aid to families with young children, as exemplified by its wonderful Pediatric Unit at the Cambridge City Hospital and the formation of its Kids Council; and

WHEREAS: Years of research have shown that the first years of life are crucial to a child's healthy development, for it is during these years that a child's feelings of self-esteem are fostered, and its curiosity about the world develops; and

WHEREAS: It is also during a child's early years that a child's relationship with its parents is created, perhaps the most important relationship the child will ever form; and

WHEREAS: Doctor T. BERRY BRAZELTON, the revolutionary pediatrician who twenty years ago developed what has come to be known as the Brazelton Scale, a standardized measure of a new-born's individuality, has for his entire career sought to change the way in which grown-ups look at children; and

WHEREAS: Doctor T. BERRY BRAZELTON has taken yet another step toward helping young parents understand how individual and human new borns are, with the creation of the Brazelton Center for Infants and Parents; and

WHEREAS: The Brazelton Center for Infants and Parents is scheduled to open officially on Tuesday, August 15, 1995; now therefore be it

RESOLVED: That this City Council does hereby thank Doctor T. BERRY BRAZELTON for the many years he has devoted to the service of young families, including many in Cambridge; and be it further

RESOLVED: That this City Council congratulates Doctor T. BERRY BRAZELTON on the opening of the Brazelton Center for Infants and Parents, and wishes him every success in this, his latest initiative to help our families.
