- WHEREAS: The mission of the Museum of Science is to stimulate interest in and further understanding of science and technology and their importance for individuals and society by hosting exhibits and programs that: encourage curiosity, questioning and exploration; inform and educate; enhance a sense of personal achievement in learning; and promote respect for individual interests, background and abilities; and
- WHEREAS: The mission of the Museum of Science is even more important today when the United States faces increased international competition in the field of science and technology while our own federal administration struggles to maintain adequate support; and
- WHEREAS: The Computer Clubhouse, a project of the Museum of Science and the MIT Media Lab, provides a creative and safe learning environment where young people from underserved communities work with adult mentors to explore their own ideas, develop skills, and build confidence in themselves through the use of technology; and
- WHEREAS: The Intel Computer Clubhouse is internationally recognized as a successful learning model that uses technology to bridge the digital divide within nations and between nations, a divide that often results in access to opportunity for some and alienation from opportunity for others; and
- WHEREAS: From its humble origins in the Museum of Science the Computer Clubhouse model became the model of the Intel Computer Clubhouse Network; a network encompassing over 100 clubhouses in 21 countries across the globe serving as a positive force in the lives of thousands of youth in poor communities around the globe with its flagship based in the Museum of Science; now therefore be it
