Wally Moses, 80, played for Sox in 1946 Series

Wally Moses of Vidalia, Ga., who played for the Boston Red Sox in the 1946 World Series and had a .291 lifetime batting average in 17 seasons with three different American League baseball teams, died Wednesday, two days after his 80th birthday.

Mr. Moses had been ill for about a year and had suffered from chronic lung problems for about 10 years. A family member said he died of a stroke.

Mr. Moses was voted the American League Rookie of the Year in 1935 when he hit .325 with the Philadelphia Athletics. He spent his first seven years with the A's, played for 7 1/2 years with the Chicago White Sox and 2 1/2 years with the Red Sox before returning to the A's for his final three seasons.

Mr. Moses hit .471 in the 1946 World Series for the Red Sox, his only appearance in the post-season event.

After completing his playing career, Mr. Moses served as a batting coach for 13 years with the A's, Philadelphia Phillies, Cincinnati Reds, New York Yankees and Detroit Tigers.

He is survived by his wife, Billie; a daughter, Judy Lathem of Washington, D.C.; two brothers, a sister and a grandson.

Funeral services will be held at 3 p.m. today at Vidalia Presbyterian Church.

John 'Jack' Fadden, athletic trainer, at 91

John P. "Jack" Fadden of Belmont, 91, athletic trainer at Harvard since 1920, died yesterday following a lengthy illness.

For almost 70 years, Mr. Fadden diagnosed and treated injuries of Harvard athletes with the compassion and knowledge of a trained physician.

Mr. Fadden attended Bridgeton Academy and then entered the Posse-Nissen School of Physical Education where he came in contact with Dr. Tommy Richards, then the doctor for the Harvard football team. Richards brought Mr. Fadden to Harvard in 1920 and encouraged him to go back to school for more training. Taking this advice, Mr. Fadden prepped at Manter Hall School in Cambridge for a year and entered Harvard in the class of 1932. He left after two years as the work consumed him.

During his tenure at Harvard, Mr. Fadden also became the trainer of the Boston Yanks football team, now the Indianapolis Colts, from 1944-48 and the Red Sox from 1950-65. There he gained national recognition for revolutionizing the field of treatment of athletic injuries.

"He started the new breed of athletic trainer," said Red Sox clubhouse manager and equipment manager, Don Fitzpatrick, who worked along side Mr. Fadden with the Red Sox and at Harvard. "He was very intelligent and worked very closely with all of the doctors he knew from Harvard. He had a wonderful philosophy and was a psychological marvel with the players."

"He also was one of the few trainers who could read X-rays accurately, and that helped a lot," Fitzpatrick said. "He also knew all sports and the injuries dealing with all sports. He took me with him to Harvard to work with the football team. I owe him a lot."

In his time, Mr. Fadden treated the greats of sports. He listed Ted Williams, Ty Cobb, Bob Cousy and Harvard All-American Chub Peabody and Pat McInally among his more famous patients.

It would be folly to only include athletes on the seemingly endless list of people he had treated. That would omit such luminaries as President John F. Kennedy and senators Ted Kennedy and John Culver.

In 1966, more than 1,000 people attended a testimonial to Mr. Fadden at Boston's Statler Hilton Ballroom. As meaningful as that evening was to Mr. Fadden, equally important was a letter he received from a former Harvard football player who wrote to him from medical school.

"I learned more from you than from any course at Harvard. You'll influence me for the rest of my life," the letter read.

In keeping with this sentiment and sincere respect, Mr. Fadden was given an honorary "H" by the Harvard Athletic Club and the Jack Fadden Award has been given each year since 1966 to the athlete who has most overcome physical hardship to make an important contribution to his team.

Mr. Fadden is survived by a son, John Jr. of Belmont.

John P. Fadden, 91; was trainer for Harvard athletes, Red Sox

Appreciation, Page 62.

John P. Fadden, trainer of Harvard athletes for more than 50 years and of Boston Red Sox players from 1950 to 1965, died of prostate cancer Wednesday at the Neville Manor nursing home, Cambridge. He was 91 and a lifelong resident of Brookline.

Mr. Fadden, the eldest son of an Irish immigrant day laborer from County Mayo, was also trainer of the Boston Yanks football team from 1944 to 1948.

Many of the leading athletes and other notables of his time beat a path to his massage tables, whirlpool baths or diathermy machines — including Babe Ruth, Ted Williams, Ty Cobb, Carl Yastrzemski, Bob Cousy, Bill Russell, Boston Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler and the Kennedy brothers, John F., Robert F. and Edward M. The Kennedys had back ailments; Fiedler, an ailing baton arm.

"Jack Fadden never rubbed anyone the wrong way," Sen. Edward Kennedy once remarked.

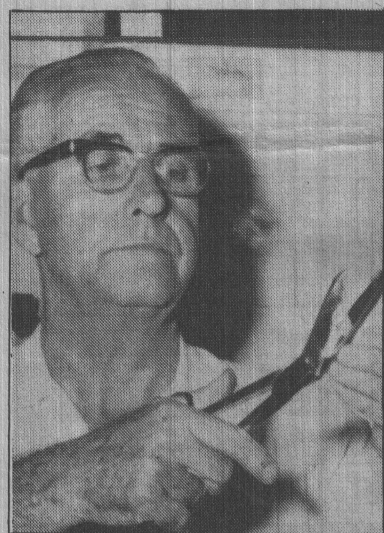

Bill Cleary, Harvard's athletic director, said: "Jack was truly one of the all-time great human beings whose station in life was to help as many people as he could. He helped those in all walks of life — high school, college and professional — and no one was a stranger to him."

The John P. Fadden Award was established in his honor in 1966 and given each year to the Harvard senior who has overcome physical adversity to make an important contribution to his or her team.

He was made an honorary H by the Harvard Varsity Club and in 1973 was named its man of the year for his influence on Harvard athletics. Mr. Fadden is the only non-Harvard graduate so honored. The university's alumni association also awarded him a Harvard Medal.

At a testimonial dinner for Mr. Fadden in 1966 at the Statler Hilton Hotel in Boston, more than 1,000 turned out. Ted Williams, who retired as the Red Sox left fielder in 1960, was reportedly so moved by the occasion that he wore a necktie, a sartorial departure for him.

Mr. Fadden had supervised Williams' recovery from a shattered elbow in 1941 and numerous other injuries, a broken collarbone, a cracked ankle and a pinched nerve in the neck, to name a few. Williams said of Mr. Fadden: "He not only helped me prolong my career but is one of the best friends I ever had."

JOHN P. FADDEN

One of Mr. Fadden's favorite stories concerned the time Williams spat in the direction of the press at Fenway Park.

"Jack," he recalled Williams saying, "everybody has had something to say to me about this little incident, but you haven't said a word about it. You seem to know a little bit about everything."

Mr. Fadden paused, glanced at Williams, and declared: "I know quite a bit, but I'm no child psychologist."

At Harvard, Mr. Fadden liked football, baseball and hockey best.

"No sport has a monopoly on nerve or guts," he once said. "Every kid who comes here has courage. It's mostly a matter of coordination. Never tell a complaining athlete there's nothing wrong with him. If you can't think of anything else, tell him he's tying his shoelaces wrong. Build him up."

Mr. Fadden attended Bridgton Academy in Maine and then entered the Posse-Nissen School of Physical Education in Boston. He took a course under Dr. Tommy Richards, then the Harvard football team's doctor. Richards brought Mr. Fadden to work at Harvard in 1920.

He attended Harvard as a student for two years, but dropped out in 1934 because his work as a trainer was so demanding.

Mr. Fadden's wife, Mary E. (O'Hara), died in 1961. He leaves a son, John P. Jr. of Belmont; and a grandson.

A funeral Mass will be said Monday at 10 a.m. in St. Mary of the Assumption Church, Brookline. Burial will be in St. Joseph Cemetery, West Roxbury.

Roger C. Graves Jr., 71 Retired investment executive

A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. today in the Wellesley Congregational (Village) Church in Wellesley for Roger C. Graves Jr. of Nashua, N.H., a retired investment sales and marketing executive.

Mr. Graves died of a stroke Saturday in St. Joseph's Hospital, Nashua. He was 71 and a former resident of Brookline.

He retired earlier this year as senior account executive with Ogden Allied Services. Previously he held positions with Burns International, Fidelity Management and Research and New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., among others.

A graduate of Phillips Exeter Academy in 1939 and Harvard College in 1948, Mr. Graves served as a lieutenant junior grade on a Navy landing craft-infantry in the Pacific and was decorated with seven battle stars.

Mr. Graves was a director of the Red Cross in Nashua.

He leaves a brother, Roger C. Jr. of Brookline; and a sister, Sarah Hammerness of Wellesley.

George Barnicle, 75 Was Boston Braves pitcher

George Barnicle, a pitcher for the Boston Braves in 1938 and 1939, died Wednesday in Largo, Fla. He was 75 and a former resident of Fitchburg.

After World War II, Mr. Barnicle, a native of Fitchburg, worked for the Youth Service Board at the old Industrial School for Boys in Shirley.

He leaves his wife, Irene; three sons, Thomas of Barre, George Jr. of Largo and Dennis of Buffalo Grove, Ill.; and six grandchildren.

Galo Putnam Emerson Founded Putnam Pantry stores

Services will be held at 2 p.m. today in the Israel Putnam Home in Danvers for Galo Putnam Emerson of Amherst, founder of the Putnam Pantry Candy stores in Danvers, Salem, Burlington and Lexington.

Mr. Emerson died of a heart attack Monday in Cooley-Dickenson Hospital, Northampton. He was 77 and a former resident of Danvers.

He opened the first store, a candy-making business, in Danvers in 1951 after heading tourist development for the New England Council. He retired in the late 1960s.

Born in Danvers, Mr. Emerson graduated from Phillips Exeter Academy and attended Dartmouth College. During World War II he served as a second lieutenant in the Army Air Corps.

He was a past president of the Danvers Rotary Club and the Danvers Chamber of Commerce.

He leaves his wife, Ruth (Johnson); four sons, Galo P. Jr. of Danvers, Robert of New York, John of Hampstead, N.H., and David of Weymouth; two sisters, Miriam Peters of Northampton and Eunice Raymond of Palm Springs, Calif.; three brothers, Edward of Norwich, Vt., John of Northampton and George of Newport, R.I.; and 10 grandchildren.

Melbourne Cummings Founder of publishing company

Melbourne Wesley Cummings, who founded the Addison-Wesley Publishing Co. in 1942, died Tuesday in his home in Melrose. He was 84.

Addison-Wesley, which moved its headquarters from Kendall Square, Cambridge, to Reading in 1956, is the fifth-largest publisher of college textbooks. The company specializes in mathematics and science texts for students at all levels.

Mr. Cummings retired in 1988 after serving as president and chairman of the worldwide organization.

Born in Beverly, Mr. Cummings graduated from Enfield High School in New Hampshire and received a bachelor's degree in engineering at the University of New Hampshire in 1929. He worked for a printing firm in Concord, N.H., before opening his publishing house near the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He received an honorary doctor of laws degree from the University of New Hampshire in 1962 and the William A. Dwiggin Award of the Bookbuilders of Boston in 1990.

Mr. Cummings leaves his wife, Barbara (Lamson); and a daughter, Diane of Boston.

Services will be private.

Carlos Thompson, 67 Popular Argentine actor

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Carlos Thompson, an actor whose passionate roles in 1950s melodramas gained him an enthusiastic following throughout Latin America, has died. He was 67.

Mr. Thompson's body was found Wednesday afternoon in his apartment in fashionable Barrio Norte neighborhood with a bullet wound to the head, Judge Luis Cevasco said Thursday. Foul play was not suspected.

Two letters were found with the body — one to his agent, Roberto Fraga, and one to actress Chunchuna Villafane, his partner in the stage production "Love Letters." Neither explained the death, officials said.

He was once married to German actress Lilli Palmer, with whom he lived in Switzerland. After her death several years ago, Mr. Thompson returned to Argentina for the first time in nearly four decades.

In the 1950s, the tall, dark-haired actor was a leading actor in Argentine melodramas that played to packed houses up and down the continent. Along with countryman Fernando Lamas, he was the epitome of the Latin lover.

His many film roles included a villain in the "Valley of the Kings," starring Yvonne de Carlo, and "Flame of Treason," in which he played opposite Lana Turner.

He also starred in "El Tunnel," based on the novel by the noted Argentine writer Ernesto Sabato.

Wally Moses, 80 Longtime baseball player, coach

ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIDALIA, Ga. — Services for Wally Moses, who spent 30 years in major league baseball as a player and batting coach, will be held tomorrow in Vidalia Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Moses, who turned 80 on Monday, died of a stroke Wednesday night.

He had a .291 lifetime batting average in 17 seasons with the Philadelphia Athletics, Chicago White Sox and Boston Red Sox. After ending his playing career in 1951, he became a batting coach, serving 13 years with the Athletics, Philadelphia Phillies, Cincinnati Reds, New York Yankees and Detroit Tigers.

He made an impact in his first major league season, winning the American League Rookie of the Year award in 1935 when he hit .325 for the Athletics.

He batted more than .300 in each of his first seven seasons before the A's dealt him to the White Sox in 1942. Mr. Moses was traded to the Red Sox during the 1946 season and went back to the Athletics in 1949 for the final three years of his playing career.

He played in 2,012 games, had 2,138 hits, drove in 695 runs and scored 1,114 runs. He hit 89 home runs and stole 174 bases.

Mr. Moses made the AL all-star team in 1937 when he hit 25 home runs, drove in 86, scored 113 and finished with a .320 batting average.

Attorneys for Patriarca say guilty plea has been discussed

By Elizabeth Neuffer

Attorneys for reputed Mafia boss Raymond (Junior) Patriarca yesterday asked for postponement of a court hearing in his racketeering case and said discussions about a possible guilty plea were ongoing.

But the attorneys gave no indication which way the reputed organized crime figure was leaning, or what he would do at the rescheduled hearing on Oct. 25.

"Today we asked for a two-week adjournment," said Victoria Toensing, a Washington attorney representing Patriarca. "Meanwhile, we are always talking about plea negotiations."

Fog curbs flights at Logan Airport

Thick fog slowed travelers trying to fly in or out of Logan Airport yesterday, causing more than 80 percent of flights to be diverted, canceled or delayed. From late morning until midafternoon, just 59 of 240 scheduled arrivals managed to land in Boston, many of them late. (AP)

Small earthquake felt in Plymouth

PLYMOUTH — A small earthquake rumbled through part of southeastern Massachusetts early yesterday, rattling some residents in their beds but causing no damage, officials said. The quake, centered in Plymouth, struck at 2:51 a.m. It registered about 3.1 on a "modified scale" and lasted only a few seconds, said Rev. James McCaffrey, assistant to the director at Boston College's Weston Observatory. The effects were felt as far as Cape Cod, 15 miles away. There were no reports of injuries or damage. (UPI)

Butchy Doe trial begins

A federal prosecutor yesterday accused a Charlestown man of leading police on a car chase while he was drunk and illegally having a gun in his possession. "This case is about a convicted felon and his gun," assistant US Attorney David Douglass told a federal jury yesterday. "That gun is a 9mm pistol recovered from a car earlier this year." Douglass was delivering opening statements in the trial of Arthur (Butchy) Doe, ongoing in Boston's federal court before US District Judge Douglas Woodlock. Doe was arrested after leading police in a wild chase last spring.

Fund for children of flier started

A fund has been established for the education of the young children of Major Peter S. Hook, an Air Force fighter pilot killed in a training mission in the Arabian peninsula on Sept. 30. Hook's widow, Linda, of Goldsboro, N.C., is originally from Brighton, where her parents, John and Marion Hazell, and a sister, Lori Hazell, live. Besides his wife, Maj. The family has requested that donations for the children's education may be made to: Peter S. Hook Memorial Fund, Wachovia Bank, Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, N.C., 27531.

17 awaiting trial go to court early

Faced with a full house at the new Nashua Street jail, Suffolk County Sheriff Robert Rufo yesterday ordered 17 of 24 pretrial detainees held overnight in the basement of the Suffolk County Courthouse. Seven of the 24 were kept at a halfway house. Rufo had held 17 others Wednesday in the courthouse detention cells after Superior Court Judge Daniel Ford declined to release them to a halfway house. Because of a federal limit on the number held in the new jail, Rufo could be forced to release detainees if he cannot find a cell somewhere to hold them.

No shouts, neighbors testify at Lewin trial

By Doris Sue Wong

GREENFIELD — Residents of a Dorchester three-decker where Detective Sherman Griffiths was killed in a 1988 drug raid testified yesterday that they heard no warning shouts from police before the officers tried to break down the door to a third-floor apartment.

The testimony by the residents, who were called as prosecution witnesses, conflicted with that of officers who said Griffiths had repeatedly yelled "police" before and as officers struck the apartment door of a suspected drug dealer with a battering ram and sledgehammer.

As Griffiths swung with the sledgehammer on Feb. 17, 1988, an unseen gunman opened fire through the steel-reinforced door, killing Griffiths.

Albert Lewin, 34, a Jamaican immigrant accused of being the shooter, is on trial here for first-degree murder. The trial was moved from Boston due to pretrial publicity.

The issue of whether the person inside the third-floor apartment had been forewarned that it was officers and not robbers who were attempting to break in could mean the difference between murder and manslaughter.

Last week and earlier this week, members of Griffiths' drug control squad testified the detective yelled "police" in a "loud, clear" voice before the squad tried to break down the door to execute a no-knock search warrant for drugs.

Three residents of the building who said they heard the banging and gunfire said yesterday, however, that they never heard the warning shouts.

In addition, one of the residents, Hipolito Burgos, who lived in the apartment directly below, yesterday suggested law enforcement officials had tried to pressure him into saying he had heard the shouts.

Under questioning by defense attorney Max Stern, Burgos said when he was visited by two prosecutors and an officer at his second-floor apartment in June that "they tried to take something out of me that's not true."

"The only thing I told them," added Burgos, "was that if he was going to try to make me say something I don't know, he would leave the house. I told them I can't say I heard 'Boston police' on the third floor before I heard the banging."

Under questioning by Suffolk County prosecutor Thomas Mundy, Burgos acknowledged he was upset because his wife would also be subpoenaed as a witness and he did not want her to have to testify.

Burgos and other residents said the only time they heard one of the officers cry out "police" was after the shooting, when Detective Carlos Luna ran down the stairway saying that an officer had been shot and asking anyone with a telephone to call for help.

Philip Scott, 63, who lives in the second-floor apartment across from Burgos, identified Lewin as the occupant of the third-floor apartment.

But under further questioning, Scott acknowledged that he told the defense team in April he could not identify a photograph of Lewin.

Easton police chief defends granting gun permit to Fryar

■ FRYER

State Police stopped him for speeding and found a loaded shotgun, a handgun and hollow-point bullets in his car — would bar him from being a suitable applicant, Healey characterized the arrest as "a motor vehicle violation."

"I have the whole report here. That didn't play a role" in his decision to grant Fryar a permit, said Healey. "He wasn't flashing any guns. He just had them in the trunk. He has motor vehicle violations. Everybody has those."

Asked about Fryar's history of violence involving his wife and a former girlfriend, Healey said, "Again, don't we all?"

Fryar's attorney, Joseph Cavanaugh of Providence, said he had no knowledge of the circumstances surrounding Fryar's obtaining a gun permit.

"All I know is Irving has a valid license," said Cavanaugh.

That license, however, does not allow Fryar to draw the gun in another state, which police allege he did in going to the aid of teammate

Hart Lee Dykes, who was being beaten.

Massachusetts is regarded as one of the most difficult states in the nation in which to obtain a permit to buy and carry a handgun. But, the discretion to award or deny permits is left up to the police chief of the community in which the applicant resides.

Fryar, who now lives in Sharon, apparently violated state law by not notifying authorities that he had moved from Easton. Such notification is required within 30 days of any of the state's 500,000 licensed handgun owners' moving.

Under the law, Fryar's permit can be revoked for failing to notify the local chief and the state Department of Public Safety. It can also be revoked because of his arrest Wednesday.

Both Healey and Cavanaugh said they did not know when Fryar moved to Sharon. Sources close to the Patriots suggested the move was a recent one, but probably occurred more than a month ago.

Several police chiefs and others in law enforcement said in interviews yesterday that they were surprised Fryar had been given a permit, considering his history.

"If that guy had shot somebody, you would have had a liability case that would have cost the town of Easton an arm and a leg," said one law enforcement official, who spoke on condition that his name not be used. "That guy has been in trouble left and right. You don't give somebody like that a license to carry."

Healey defended his record of routinely granting permits.

"You don't have the time to study their [applicants'] history," he said.

"I've had pretty good luck in 11 years as chief. I haven't had too many problems."

In addition to the arrest in New Jersey, Fryar pleaded guilty in 1984 to assaulting a former girlfriend at the University of Nebraska. He was fined $150 and ordered to make restitution for breaking her apartment door.

In 1986, Fryar and his wife were hospitalized for injuries sustained during an apparent domestic argument.

Also in 1986, in separate incidents, Fryar was identified in a Globe story as one of six Patriots players involved in illegal drug use, and was charged with assaulting a Boston man at the Back Bay Hilton.

Tracking, retention targeted

■ SCHOOLS
allows them to progress from kindergarten through 12th grade in an appropriate fashion and prepares them to go on to college," Leonard said.

Retention questioned
Like tracking, grade retention — a practice that in Boston is begun in the first grade — has disproportionately been applied to black and Hispanic students without any evidence that it has boosted their academic performance, according to critics of the practice.

Instead, retained children begin to slump behind their peers who are promoted to the next grade, a gap that in many instances is never bridged and is a key reason why some youngsters drop out, the critics say. It is a contention that is supported by research.

According to the state Department of Education, which has strongly condemned the retaining of children, more than 100 studies on the practice have been published recently and none has found any evidence that retention works.

"The research has shown that children have three basic fears — losing a parent, going blind and being kept back," said Mary Grasso O'Neil, deputy superintendent of the north zone for the city's public schools and a member of the task force. "Given that that is the situation, why would we want to punish students by retaining them?"

"Of course we want to hold children accountable for their work, but we also want to hold the system accountable for the product. We want a way to ensure that all children will succeed."

Concern about quality
But one member of McDonough's panel said he was concerned that the growing demand for eliminating tracking could actually undermine the quality of some schools.

"When you do away with ability grouping, you do away with honors courses and for schools like ours it presents the problem of how do we attract students and parents," said Albert Holland, headmaster of the Jeremiah E. Burke High School and a member of the task force. "I have a small high school and if I don't have challenging courses, I'll have parents who want their kids out of here."

Other members of the panel on grade retention and tracking are William Dandridge, dean of the Graduate College of Education at UMass-Boston, who will serve as chairman of the panel; Ruth Brown, a teacher at the Charles Taylor Elementary School; Mark Granger, a parent; Joyce Grant, deputy superintendent for curriculum and instruction for the city's schools; Joyce King, a professor at UMass-Boston; Michael Kim Marshall, principal of the Mather Elementary School; Vito Perrone, a professor of education at Harvard University; Robert Sperber, director of the Boston Higher Education Partnership; Lu Valentin, a parent; Linda Weaver, parent; Valery Wong, a teacher at Charlestown High School; and Walter Wood, a teacher at the Fry Thompson Middle School.

Serving as advisers to the will be Harold Howe 3d, a professor of education at Harvard; Robert Sizer, an education consultant who works on an algebra project in the Ann Poissant-Hudson, a B psychologist who works for Psychological Associates; a more Sizer, dean of the school at Brown University
