Red Cross gets okay for library

By Jay Weaver
Staff writer

The American Red Cross finally got a hit last week in its frustrating series with the Cambridge Historical Commission. And it turned out to be a home run.

In a tight 4-3 vote last Thursday, the historical commission granted the Red Cross a certificate of non-applicability for an underground library to be built underneath the organization's parking lot.

The vote not only means the Red Cross slump is over, it also means the group can move ahead with its plans to rehabilitate its historic building on Waterhouse street and relandscape its property. For the past two years, neighbors in the historic district facing the Cambridge Common and several city officials have successfully fought the nonprofit group's redevelopment plans.

Under the approved plan, the Red Cross and its basement tenant, the Cambridge Center for Behavioral Studies, can now develop the underground library. The educational center will use the new space for storing books and archives. In turn, the Red Cross will draw additional revenue from the center to pay for fixing up its 19th century building.

"This will be a first step toward finally being able to rehabilitate that property," said Dr. Robert Epstein,

Rent control 'tax' eyed for high-income households

By J. Barry Mothes
Staff writer

Warning to all tenants of rent-control units in Cambridge whose combined income is more than $40,000 a year — City Councilor William Walsh is coming after you.

Within the next few weeks, Walsh will propose an amendment to the city's rent control laws that would add a 10 percent surcharge on monthly rents for units where the combined income of the residents is more than $40,000.

According to the proposal, rent for an average one-bedroom rent-controlled apartment where the combined income exceeded $40,000 would rise from $363 to $399.

The receipts from the surcharge would go the city's affordable housing trust fund, according to Walsh's plan. He estimates the receipts would generate about $1 million a year to build or fix up low- and moderate-income housing in the city.

That, along with an estimated $1

Volunteers hard at work on 13th River Festival

By Rachel Leibson
Special to the Chronicle

In a city as old and venerable as Cambridge, the 12-year history of the Cambridge River Festival might seem trifling. But not if you consider the way Cambridge residents and their envious neighbors have taken the festival to heart.

This summer will boast the 13th annual celebration of the River Festival, a week-long party that warms up on Sunday, June 5, and goes out with a bang on Saturday, June 11. Artists, performers, festival organizers, volunteers and local businesses are gearing up for the events throughout the month of May. The festival has become the city's un-official rite of spring.

Over the years, the festival has had many different incarnations but it remains true to its purpose as conceived on its first birthday in 1976. It was created by the Cambridge Arts Council to be an expression of the diversity of the arts in Cambridge. Each year the festival hosts events involving local music groups, ethnic music and dance, street performers, folk artists, public art and marching bands. Explains Roy-Alan Hansen, deputy executive director of the Cambridge Arts Council; "We try to orchestrate the public, shared life of Cambridge. We want to bring public life into an arena where it is a celebration of Cambridge School Superintendent Robert S. Peterkin will leave the city this summer for a job as superintendent of the Milwaukee public schools.

After much speculation over Peterkin's departure, including a visit to Cambridge last week by members of the Milwaukee Public School Board, Peterkin was told that the job was his last Friday.

Peterkin, 42, flew out to Milwaukee on May 6 to accept the $105,000 job during a late afternoon meeting with the Milwaukee School Board. He will sign a three-year contract and spend 15 days there before he officially begins the job on August 1.

"Obviously, I leave with very mixed emotions," Peterkin said this week. "I think the system here has made a lot of strides during the period of time that I was here. It doesn't all have to do with me," Peterkin added, "but also with people very committed to providing education for children."

The nine-member Milwaukee School Board voted unanimously on Peterkin's appointment. Milwaukee School Board Member Jeanette Mitchell said she cast her vote "with joy in my heart," adding that the appointment was "a perfect match for Milwaukee."

In addition to the salary, Peterkin will also receive $9,000 as a tax-free annuity, a car for personal and professional use, relocating costs such as moving expenses and closing costs on his Cambridge condominium, and an early retirement plan.

Peterkin will also receive a "salary reopener" during his second and third year in the Milwaukee Public Schools.

In Cambridge, community and school staff response to Peterkin's departure included sadness and dismay. Many have said that Peterkin was a good school leader who refused to bend to often ardent opinions, including those of the school committee's independent and Cambridge Civic Association members and community members.

"I regret that we may have lost some time on a school committee level," said Caroline Hunter, a math instructor at the Cambridge Rindge and Latin School.

Yesterday, the Cambridge School Committee had a special meeting to discuss several outstanding school staff appointments, and what can be accomplished in the timetable before Peterkin's June or July departure.

The hiring of Peterkin's replacement may not be easy because there

Hotel planned for Harvard Sq.

By Jay Weaver
Staff writer

Whether you like it or not, the Georgian-style Gulf station on the eastern edge of Harvard Square will probably be history by this time next year.

Harvard University plans to knock down the structure, built in 1940, to make way for a 200-room, 5-story hotel on the triangular site bounded by Mass. avenue and Harvard street.

While the school's plan took some residents by surprise, the reaction this week has been mixed. Several residents, including the Mid-Cambridge Neighborhood Association, are far from sold on the idea of a hotel on the Gulf station lot, raising concerns about its size and impact on traffic in the area. Others say they would have no regrets about the demolition of the station — which no longer sells gas and currently houses a rental car agency — or the removal of its parking lot.

The valuable site, which Harvard has owned for decades, is considered a prominent gateway to Harvard Square and falls within the area's overlay district, a zoning package crafted in 1986 to limit the height and size of new buildings and preserve the historic character of the square.

The school's proposal is among a half dozen development plans in the area, but it is the first on the drawing board for the eastern edge of the square. At this stage, the preliminary hotel plan would not need any zoning relief.

"The square can absorb and needs another moderately priced hotel," said Jacqueline O'Neill, Harvard's associate vice president of state and community affairs.

She said the proposed hotel would not have a restaurant or bar and would probably serve only breakfast. The rooms would be priced under $100 per night. The hotel would include at least 100 underground parking spaces, which would be required if Harvard builds to the maximum allowed on the 31,000-square-foot lot.

She said the primary reason Harvard is moving forward on the project now is to provide more short-term accommodations for visitors to the school and to replace the Harvard Motor House.

What the benefit of a hotel is to the neighborhood is not clear. We don't see any comparable benefit to what is there now.

John Pitkin

The 72-room motor house, built in the 1950s and owned by Harvard, is slated for demolition to make way for a retail-office project.

Harvard could build a hotel up to 5 stories covering as much as 93,000 square feet based on the current zoning in the overlay district. The zoning allows residential, institutional and hotel uses but not commercial activity.

However, a new downzoning petition has been filed by a neighborhood group that could stop the school's plan. The downzoning would reduce the extent of allowable development on the gas station site by one-third.

Harvard sees the petition as a "threat," O'Neill said. "If it passed, it would mean the project would not happen." Harvard plans to file an official protest against the downzoning, which could hurt the petition's chances for passage by the city council.

The Coalition for Harvard Square, the group that filed the petition, has not formally met with Harvard officials. But its chair, Philip Dowds, already has reservations about the project.

AND IN THIS CORNER... Vellucci-Howe race begins

By J. Barry Mothes
Staff writer

As one person said afterwards, it was not the kind of night that would spark voters to put a bumper sticker on their car.

Incumbent State Reps. Marie Howe and Peter Vellucci squared off in a two-hour debate Tuesday night in Somerville and neither was able to clearly outline why they would be the better person to represent the newly-merged 29th Middlesex District.

Cambridge State Rep. Peter Vellucci

Nonetheless, the informal kick-off to their Democratic primary battle featured a few scuffles over past voting records and personalities.

Because of the recent redistricting of House and Senate districts, Howe, a 12-term incumbent from Somerville, and Vellucci, a 3-term incumbent from Cambridge, are squaring off for this September's Democratic primary. They are the only two incumbent legislators in the state facing off as a result of the redistricting.

What political insiders consider to be one of the hottest legislative races of the fall got off to a relatively cool start before a crowd of 70 people at Tuesday night's debate at Somerville's Lincoln Park Community School. The debte was sponsored by Somerville's Ward 1 and Ward 2 Democratic Committees and moderated by the state's League of Women Voters.

Overall, Vellucci held a slight edge in the nearly two-hour debate, which was structured into more of a question and answer format. Several of Howe's statements this week appeared to conflict with her past voting patterns.

After noting his votes in favor of equal wages for men and women and against restrictions on abortions, Vellucci characterized Howe's voting on women's issues as inconsistent. In the past, Howe is on record as voting against comparable worth and in favor of restrictions on abortions.

Howe, however, said this week tht her vote on comparable worth was a misprint and that she in fact supports equal wages. She also said that while she is "personally opposed to abor-

NOTICE TO OUR READERS AND ADVERTISERS

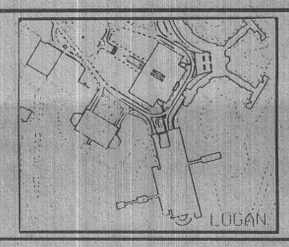

Effective with this week's issue of the Watertown Press, the newsstand price of the paper will be 50 cents. Also effective May 12, the home delivery price of the newspaper will be 40 cents, an increase of 5 cents.

The price increase has been made necessary because of increased postage rates and increased newsprint and production costs.

Also, effective June 1, 1988, advertising rates will be increased by 5 percent.

Zoning filing fee increase proposed

By J. Barry Mothes
Staff writer

The fee for filing a zoning petition in Cambridge may soon jump from the current $75 to $200.

Faced with a sharp increase in the number of petitions filed and increased revenue shortages, City Clerk Joseph Connarton thinks the city is ready for what would be the first fee hike since 1977, when it was upped from $25 to $75.

In the past two years, the city council has considered 17 petitions to the zoning ordinance and six already this year. Under city law, public hearings on the petitions before the council's Ordinance Committee and any subsequent actions by the council must also be advertised in local newspapers. The clerk's office must also notify all abutting residents who would be affected by the petition.

Connarton calculates it costs the city $800 in advertising costs and mailing costs every time a zoning petition is filed with his office. "And that doesn't even touch the staff time," he said.

Based on that figure, the total cost of the last 17 petitions was $13,600, while the total revenues, excluding those petitions filed by the City Council and the Planning Board, was $900.

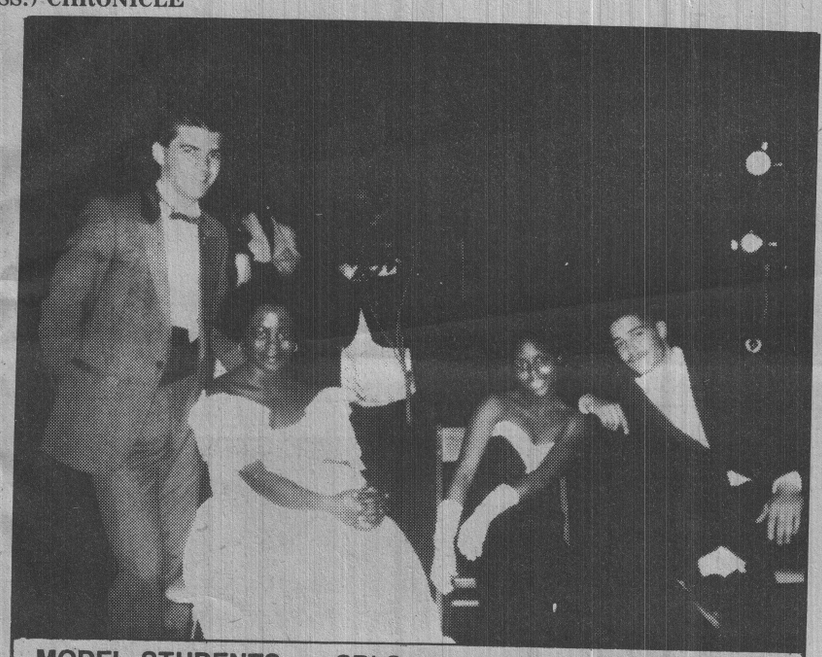

"My proposal is clearly from a cost-effective standpoint," Connarton said. "It's not to prohibit anyone from coming in to file an amendment."

Connarton said he initially considered proposing a $400 fee, which he said would cover the true advertising costs, but decided "that was truly prohibitive."

The city's Planning Board has already held a hearing on the proposal and supports it. The city council's Ordinance Committee will hold a hearing on the proposal May 19. The council will take a final vote on the proposal sometime in June.

The number of zoning petitions filed by citizens and community groups has increased dramatically over the past few years as Cambridge undergoes rapid development and building construction.

Just last week the city council voted down the so-called Major Brooks Petition, an attempt by Riverside residents to amend the city's townhouse ordinance to reduce the size and scale of townhouse development in most of the neighborhood. For that petition, the clerk's office mailed 600 notices out to resident abutters.

director of the educational center. "That's something the Red Cross has wanted to do all along."

In recent months, Epstein has waged a war of words against Charles Sullivan, executive director of the historical commission, charging that his behavior toward the Red Cross has been "improper" and "hostile."

Sullivan, who recommended to the commission to turn down the Red Cross permit request, has maintained that the library, though underground, could have an adverse impact on the historic district.

Before the certificate of non-applicability is formally granted, the Red Cross must submit the final architectural plans to the commission. But that is expected to be a simple step.

"We've really gone out of our way to accommodate people's concerns," Epstein said.

Nonetheless, the Red Cross still has a lawsuit pending against the historical commission over its denial of a development certificate last year. And the group also has a lawsuit pending against the city over a neighborhood downzoning petition approved by the city council.

Red Cross officials plan to review the status of the two lawsuits next week.

tion," she would support limited public funding for abortions for minors if re-elected.

Vellucci shot back at Howe, "When are you going to start voting pro-choice?" and drew brief applause, the only time either candidate drew applause for a comment.

In an apparent reversal of her past record, Howe also said Tuesday night that she would support placing foster children in homosexual or bisexual households. She voted against the concept during the last legislative session.

Vellucci also criticized Howe's support for public funding of private schools. Vellucci voted against the measure, which was defeated, while Howe voted for it. But Howe this week said she is now against the idea.

Both Howe and Vellucci stressed their ties in the Cambridge-Somerville community. The new district includes Ward 1, Ward 2, Precinct 1, and 2, and Ward 3, Precincts 1, 2 and 3 in Cambridge and Ward 1, Ward 2, Precincts 1 and 2, and Ward 3, Precincts 1, 2 and 3 in Somerville.

The new district includes about 16,000 Cambridge residents and 20,100 Somerville residents. That would include more than 21,000 of Vellucci's current constituents and 14,000 of Howe's.

In his closing statement, Vellucci pointed out he has already gained endorsements from Somerville Mayor Eugene Brune and Somerville State Sen. Salvatore Albano. And he talked of growing up on the Cambridge-Somerville border.

"We have roots in Somerville," Vellucci said, adding that his father, Cambridge Mayor Alfred Vellucci, and mother were both born in Somerville.

Howe chose to stress her 24 years of experience representing Somerville and noted her support for the so-called "Lemon Law," the use of videotaping in child sex abuse testimony and "women's issues."

"My motions have been gradual, but they have been meaningful," she told the audience.

And in one of the most pointed exchanges in an otherwise calm night, Howe said she attends a lot of community functions and meetings in Cambridge. To which Vellucci replied, "I agree my oponent goes to a lot of functions, especially funerals."

While neither Howe nor Vellucci clearly established themselves at this week's debate, the groundwork is set for what should be a grueling summer of door-to-door campaigning.

Editors Note: Tuesday night's Howe-Vellucci debate will be shown on Somerville Public Access Channel 3 on May 16, at 9 pm.

Income limit

million the city could raise through its proposed incentive zoning plan, would give the city "a chance to really do something" about affordable housing, Walsh said.

Under the proposal, all current residents of rent-controlled units in Cambridge would have 60 days to file a certified affidavit with Cambridge Rent Control Board saying whether or not the residents' combined income was more than $40,000. All future applicants for rent control units would also have to file an affidavit.

Anyone filing a false affidavit would face expulsion from the unit and would not be allowed to live in rent-controlled housing in Cambridge.

Walsh's latest proposal reflects the essence of his public philosophy about rent-control housing in Cambridge — that it should be strictly for low-income and needy families and closely enforced to stay that way and, one he holds as strongly, that the system is currently being abused by young professionals and others who could afford market rents.

Whether or not that'll fly with the rest of the council remains to be seen. If passed by the council, the proposal would also require state legislative approval in the form of a home rule petition.
