Lillian Cohan Levin, 96, helped WWII refugees

Lillian Cohan Levin of Chestnut Hill, a founder of The Window Shop in Cambridge, an organization that saved Europeans from concentration camps during World War II, died Friday at her home. She was 96.

Born in New York, she moved to Boston in 1918 and went to Boston University's Sargent College.

Mrs. Levin served as a lieutenant in the Women's Auxiliary Corps during World War II. She became a nurse's aide at Newton-Wellesley Hospital and was involved in the delivery of 252 babies. In 1942 she was called to the scene of Boston's Cocoanut Grove fire, where she remained for four days attending to the victims.

In the early 1940s, along with a small group of wives of Harvard professors, she founded

The Window Shop, an organization that helped save thousands of Europeans from concentration camps during World War II. They brought refugees from Europe and provided them with jobs and support until they could become independent. She worked alongside refugees at The Window Shop for the next 20 years, and remained a board member of the organization until it closed in the 1970s.

Mrs. Levin is survived by three daughters, Barbara Fine of Weston, Sissy Weinberg of West Newton, and Betsy Katz of Greenwich, Conn.; 11 grandchildren; and 13 great-grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held today at 2 p.m. at Temple Israel, Boston.

Burial is private.

Arrangements by Levine Chapel Inc., Brookline.
