- WHEREAS: Numerous public safety facilities across the Commonwealth are in much need of upgrading to meet the demands of this and the next century, in order to respond to new developments in areas of public safety, and to respond to the technology that the other side of the equation already has access to. The City of Cambridge's facilities are in such a state; and
- WHEREAS: The support for these facilities is being placed squarely on the local level, which under the present structure has the inability to respond; and
- WHEREAS: In 1994, General Court's Public Safety Committee released a Capital Needs Assessment Report, which focused on the unmet needs facing our municipal police and fire services; and
- WHEREAS: In response to the findings of the report, Representative Caron and Senator Jajuga filed a bill, which was co-sponsored by 114 members of the General Court, which would have provided funding for construction of public safety facilities; and
- WHEREAS: Unless state funding becomes available, numerous municipalities, including Cambridge, will have to keep putting off the construction of new public safety facilities; and
- WHEREAS: If the Commonwealth is truly supportive of Community Policing and Public Safety in general, it will provide the funding for us to meet those unmet needs in the Public Safety area; and
