

What is Farr Works and James F. Farr Academy?

Farr Works became a reality in the summer of 1992 when Barbara Greenspan, an art therapist at Farr Academy developed this project to provide summer employment for students. This successful project now employs students year round to create beautiful slab-built clay pottery and hand-painted clay tile trivets which are sold at local and regional art fairs, craft shows and other outlets. Last year, Farr Works won a contract with Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream to produce cow spot ice cream bowls for their Waterbury, Vermont Gift Shop. This contract has enabled Farr Works to employ students year round, generating enough income to pay students' salaries and overhead costs.

Farr Academy has purchased a small building across the street from the Academy, to house expanded studio and storefront space for Farr Works so that more students can be served. Future plans include serving not just Farr students, but other youths from the Cambridge area. In addition to a year round art production studio with plenty of visibility in the heart of Central Square, this new building will provide three administrative offices and a conference room; thus, freeing up space at the main building for academic purposes.

James F. Farr Academy, Inc. founded by Thomas F. Culhane in 1972, operates three programs: a certified junior and senior alternative high school in Cambridge designed to serve "at risk" adolescents; Agape Inn, a respite care facility in Holbrook for families who are caring for children and adults with developmental disabilities and multiple handicapping situations and the management of Farr Academy also operates the Brookline Infant-Toddler Center, Inc., a day care center in Newton, for children from birth to five years of age.
